«Lexington, Mass.» The writer will be happy to be one of a number who will give a course of Anti-Slavery lectures at Amory Hall, but he will not be able to meet them at the addressee's house at the time proposed. While the writer finds his present duties all that he can discharge "decently well," he is jealous of his place among the old-school Abolitionists. Inquires about Garrison's illness.

A.L.S. 3 p. 10 x 8 in.

In a postscript, the writer reminds the addressee that the proceeds from the sale of his seal are to be divided between Garrison and Mrs. Lydia Maria Child. If it did not sell, the writer will take it back and donate ten dollars instead. For an account of the seal, see Vol. 17, No. 144.

Abby Kelley suggested that the addressee might be induced to come as an agent. Sends the Liberty Press. Emphasizes the need of counteracting the Third Party politicians. Suggests that the addressee might come as an agent of the American Anti-Slavery Society or "connect yourself with us." The Central N. Y. State is entirely free from debt. It would be gratifying to have the addressee present at the Convention in Bridgewater, N. Y.

The writer was held to answer for the Mass. Anti-Slavery Society by a legal fiction. Refers to Mrs. M. W. Chapman's opinion that the funds of the Mass. Anti-Slavery Society should be used to indemnify the writer for his expenses or that the Board should send the address to collect a sum for this purpose. If the writer gives $500, he will bear the rest himself, and will soon return the $500 to the cause. If the friends of the cause bear no part of the load, "it would «Lexington, Mass.» The writer reluctantly withdraws from the list of lecturers in a course on slavery. The duties of conducting his school, in which young women are preparing themselves as teachers, require all his thoughts. The writer suggests his "most excellent friend," the Rev. Oliver Stearns of Hingham to supply his place.

Lexington. The writer seeks to allay Mr. Mann's fears that zeal for the cause of Abolition will cause him (Rev. May) to neglect his duties toward the Normal School. He adds that many of the pupils of the Normal School are Abolitionists, and that his trip to Waltham with some of them did not result in neglect of his duties. He also said that he had abandoned the idea of giving a course of lectures on Abolition. He ends the letter by saying that the Normal School is full and that some of the students want to study Latin.

Philadelphia. The writer's path is solitary as her family connections are sectarian and apposed to "modern abolition movements." Exhorts the addressee to continue in her valiant fight for the cause. Mrs. Susan (Cox) Luther has divers times been dragged out of meeting houses and cast into the street for speaking the truth. The writer quotes extensively from a written statement by Mrs. Luther of her sentiments in regard to freedom of expression of religious conviction. The writer was disappointed to find in the notices of the Pennsylvania Convention of the Eastern district that the Philadelphia riots were accorded less probatation than they deserved, except by R. Purvis. The writer seldom sees Lucretia Mott, who is one of the most popular public speakers. However, the writer wants her to be more "ultra" in carrying out her Non-Resisting principles at home. There is a great persecution movement in the Cherry Street meeting of which L. Mott is a member. The writer hopes that "brother Stephen Symonds Foster" will not die, "by such savage cruelty too." It is "passing strange" that the descendants of George Fox should be "some of the prime actors in the Tragedy."

39 Summer Street, Boston. An account of Frederick Douglass' lecture. Douglass spoke in a familiar vein and kept the audience laughing. Mrs. Tyler remembered having seen him in Baltimore. His master was a Mr. Merriman, and Douglass's real name was Edward. Warren Weston "stepped up to him quietly & called him 'Edward' at which he started as though he had been shot."

No.17

Willistown, Chester, Pa.. The writer acknowledges receipt of a letter containing resolves of the members and friends of the Mass. and American Anti-Slavery Societies. Favors wider circulation of the Liberator and is trying to get signatures to a petition for a law forbidding the use of sheriffs, constables, etc. in slave catching. Deplores the "degrading miasma of Politics." Accuses the Democrats of selfishness. Believes that the despotic course of Southern policy will help awaken the North to its true interest. Praises Garrison.

«Sherburne, Mass.» A reply to a letter requesting the writer to use his influence in extending the circulation of the Liberator. Former readers of Anti-Slavery papers no longer take them because they are "under entire and willing subjection to the ministers." The undersigned have been excommunicated from the church. Their heresy is laid to the influence of the Anti-Slavery publications, which have opened their eyes "to all the corruption of the professed church ..."

Utica, N.Y., Wants her to take charge of the Nat. Anti-Slavery Standard, to unify the factions. Thinks John A. Collins not "disposed to do those things that make for peace in the American Society." With all his unbounded "liberality", he is intolerant of those that differ from him. There is no unity in the Third Party faction. The Liberty Press is held in contempt. C.T. Torrey's Daily Patriot has become a weekly, "and is now so weakly its existence is despaired of." The American Citizen has come to an end. The American Society must do something about political action, to which doctrine there have been many converts during the last year. The writer explains her political position: only measures giving no support to slavery in church or state may be voted for. Regrets that Mrs L.M.

Lowell (Mass.). Concerned with a proposed fair to be held in Lowell. The writer regrets that she has little influence among the (working) girls. Because "these are hard times and their wages are reduced," they seem to blame those who "have appeared in their behalf before the public, and neglected the one great interest — their wages." Makes suggestions as to halls where the fair might be held. The writer does not anticipate "any signal success." Lowell people are poor as compared with those of Boston, and "they are somewhat sensitive with regard to a second hand fair." Neither do they see the connection between slave and free labor.

«Philadelphia?». The writer begs the addressee to try to make plain to Mrs. M. W. Chapman the Philadelphians' position toward the Nat. Anti-Slavery Standard. The writer believes that the Boston friends' view of them is unjust, since they regard the Philadelphian Society as dependent on the National Society (i.e. American Anti-Slavery Society), "when the true case is that we aid their funds instead of taking from them."

Reminds the addressee of the decision of the Executive Committee that, if arrangements could be made with the Standard, this paper should be sent to subscribers to the Pennsylvania Freeman in place of the Free. The friends in New York favored the idea, since they would gain $400 by the transaction. Regrets the dissension caused by money transactions.

•Cork, Ireland: The addressee's letter was read to the Anti-Slavery society, whose members were delighted "to find the articles were so much liked." The National Anti-Slavery Standard is much read, but the Liberator and Herald of Freedom "were thought rather terrible." For a long time, the writer, too, did not enjoy them, "but now that we know Mr. Nathaniel P.: Rogers's character, he could not do anything which would make us angry with him." They are glad to send things to his wife's bazaar as well as to the Concord Abolitionists. Anxious for news of Garrison's recovery, the writer sends the message that he has admiring friends in Cork. C. L. Remond first introduced the American Abolitionists to the writer and her circle. "...we do feel very, very grateful to him." Although Dedham, Mass.: The writer was present at all the meetings of the Committee of 25 (at the annual meeting of the American A.S. Society). "It was conceded on all hands that there was not material in N.Y. to make an effective Executive Committee, - James, Seloan, Gibbons, being in effect the only person of whom the Soc. knew anything." Garrison, Collins, and others urged removal of the American Society to Boston. Thomas Earle suggested the appointment, in the neighborhood of Boston, of an Executive Committee who should do the business, while the nominal location of the Society would continue to be New York. All conceded that this was the best arrangement. "It was fully understood, as I conceive, everything was to be done by the quorum in Boston - that the committee in N.Y. was to be

•Boston: The undersigned answer the addressee's letters to Ellis Gray Loring and Maria Weston Chapman of the 22nd and 24th inst. concerning the transaction of the American A.S. Society's affairs. At the Society's annual meeting, a committee of 25, entrusted with its business, considered the removal of the Society's bureau to Boston in view of the fact that the Society's business had been done almost entirely by the addressee and one other member of the committee. Since the secession of 1840, counsel and succor had been sought and received mainly from the Massachusetts friends. The proposition of moving to Boston would probably have been filed, but for the suggestion made that the Boston friends might refuse to serve under the circumstances. Then the committee unanimously adopted a proposition made by Thomas Earle that a quorum of Boston members of the American Society's committee be nominated for the transaction of the Society's business. This plan seemed to unite all parties for reasons set forth. All members of the Committee of 25 seemed to have understood the intention "with the exception of yourself." The Boston members of the committee entered at once upon their duties, in the discharge of which it seemed necessary to have the 'Record Book and also to appoint the clerk of the Depository at New York. In respect to the constitutionality of the change, the undersigned are unanimous in the opinion that whenever there is a quorum, business

Thursday afternoon was taken up with a fight between S.S. Foster and the Chairman E. Quincy, which the writer details. Quincy was supported by Wendell Phillips, also by Garrison: "For once he stood by his friends." Finally a motion to sustain the course of the Chair was carried. "Henry Brewster Stanton, Elizur Wright and a few other villains were there." A.L. 4 p. 9 7/8 x 7 3/4 in.

To the Members of the Executive Committee
resident in Boston

«New York: The New York members of the committee explain their position. "They did not understand that the design of the Society was to place the business in the hands of the Boston friends independently of those in New York..." They now resign "the entire management of its business," and wish to assist the Boston committee by advice, but "must decline any official interference or responsibility." They desire that their position be published to the Abolitionists throughout the country. In their opinion the transfer is contrary to the constitution of the Society.

•Boston: The writer gives an account of what appears to have been a social evening at which the Boston members of the Executive Board of the American A.S. Society were entertained. Mrs. Lucretia Mott was present. No conclusion was reached in respect to the New York-Boston problem. Edward Davis and Lucretia Mott "were evidently with us in feeling but wished to keep the peace at N.Y." A letter from Thomas Earle has just arrived, which will be sent to the addressees together with that of James S. Gibbons. Boston: Realizing that "there was not that perfect understanding on your part as to what we supposed to be the well known intentions of the Society, we felt that it would be next to impossible to act as we had proposed to do." If the writers' letter of the 26th ult. had convinced the addressee of their views regarding the intentions of the Society and of the absence of any constitutional objection to their taking the sole management of affairs, they might have felt it advantageous to continue. Further, the public statement which the addressee thinks necessary "would be disastrous." The majority of the Committee is, contrary to the addressee's belief, with the latter in regarding the transaction as unconstitutional.

"We thought that the loss of time & tide - the misapprehension & constitutional scruples - & the evidently wounded feelings on their part, were sufficient reasons why we should not contest our claim." They are not resigning in a body, lest enemies of the cause should "misrepresent it as a division of heart, when in fact there is only a division of opinion." Regrets "that our views cannot prevail." Wishes that the addresser could take a higher ground on political action, and come out of the government, which is pro-slavery. Argues against 3d party. "James G. Birney is a bad man."

Philadelphia. The writer saw James S. Gibbons in New York, who read to him the letter addressed to the addressees by the New York portion of the Committee, "dated 6th month 5th in which everything of importance is yielded." Gibbons adheres to the point of "making the public acquainted with the removal of the Society." Gibbons's objections to John A. Collins as General Agent continue. Collins, the writer thinks, has not most of his heart in the cause, and a number of people are opposed to his reappointment.

New York: The writer, having read her husband's (James S. Gibbons's) letter, finds it too tame. Being sensitive where her father (Isaac T. Hopper) is concerned, when a reduction of his salary was proposed, she thought "that it would have been well if a spirit of economy had so far prevailed last year as to have withheld J.A. Collins who was the means of bringing the Society in debt pretty extensively." The writer states: "we are unanimous and decided that we have no right to remove the Executive Committee from New York or its Books." Believes that it was understood that the quorum in Boston were to be considered as excused. The writer's husband is for the moment "spirit crushed." Three office agents chosen by distant friends have all proved unsatisfactory.

The writer has had very good accounts of the New York and Boston anti-slavery meetings, but thinks that the New Hampshire meeting at Concord must have "entirely failed of the intended effect." Refers to "absurdities committed in Boston on the 17th." President Tyler "insulted us by bringing a slave here." Daniel Webster "was evidently crippled, I think, «by his knowledge of conditions: for his speech was a poor affair." Mr.Oliver Stearns, the Hingham minister, has grown conservative in respect to slavery since Miss (Abby) Kelley was here and in religion since Mr.(Theodore) Parker was here. Leicester, N.Y. Requests, in the name of Mrs. Paulina Wright of Utica, some French work for the fair at Syracuse or for one to held later at Utica. Mrs. Wright would also like suggestions relative to fairs. The writer expresses dissatisfaction "with the movement at the New England Convention touching agencies. Does it not in effect annul the American Society? Does it not look like arrogance on the part of Boston?" Elaborates this theme. Emphasizes the effectiveness of work concentrated on small sections in contrast to the more sensational procedure in conventions, as the writer discovered by her own experience in Cerritos, New York. Confidentially the writer complains of John A. [redacted] ins, who "needs someone as a balance wheel." Commends Joseph C. Hathaway and asks if his services cannot be obtained.

South Scituate, Mass.: In response to the circular received the writer has devoted himself at least two days to the matter: $22.50 have been subscribed, twelve dollars of which are enclosed. "The late calamity of fire at Fall River absorbs to a great extent the sympathies and charitable contributions... Business is but little productive and the people feel poor, that in reality my success was much greater than I expected." The writer mentions that "the confidence of the friends of the cause is to a considerable extent shaken" by the views expressed by some of the lecturers, particularly by their denunciatory attitude toward churches. Elaborates on this theme, stressing the word "Moral Suasion...applied in the spirit of Love & meekness."

Cumington, Mass.. Writing in behalf of Mr. L. Packard in answer to the circular of June 30, the writer transmits the message that nothing can be done, and encloses one dollar from each, Mr. Packard and himself. Sketches the situation in the town, where a minister calls the Liberator a dangerous and hurtful paper. The writer has heard only three supposedly abolition lectures for 18 months, and these from the Liberty Party's agents. One of the Congregational preachers denounces "Garrison and his mess." Most people here identify genuine abolitionism with voting the Liberty ticket. The writer declares himself for the principles of abolition held by the Liberator. The Macedonian would have sounded "long and loud" in Garrison's ears to come from Northampton and help, but for the anxiety felt for his health.

New London, Conn.: The writer considers The Brotherhood of Thieves "eminently an anti slavery work" which he wishes to see used in the service of the cause. Suggests publishing extracts in the Liberator with a commendatory notice. Three thousand copies have been printed, and Mr. (Stephen S.) Foster was furnished with two thousand to be disposed of for his benefit. The writer thinks that a similar plan by all agents in regard to cheap antislavery literature "would have a tendency to approximate a self-sustaining basis for the anti-slavery movement."

•Cleveland, Ohio: The writer left John A. Collins at Syracuse and Frederick Douglass at Buffalo, both on the sick-list. Fears that Collins is seriously ill; received a letter from Collins' wife telling that the doctor had ordered him to speak no more for at least three months. Collins has spoken little at anti-slavery conventions, but more in his "property conventions." The writer doubts the value of such conventions for abolition. Believes that a single individual might have accomplished more than "the whole of us." Many friends of the cause have expressed the same idea. The best convention was at Rochester; describes a Sunday meeting before an audience of some 4000. Friends wanted more meetings there, but the writer was obliged to go to Buffalo, where he [redacted] three days for want of hearers. The writer found Jacob Ferris quite disheartened, for most of the abolitionists of Cleveland are third party men or Millerites. The writer deploras Collins's poor health and his absorption in "property operations." Remond and Douglass "blew him up" in a property meeting at Syracuse. The Whigs would not suffer Joshua Reed Giddings to be heard in Cleveland. The writer spent a day with Gerrit Smith at Peterborough and accompanied him to a Sabbath abolition meeting. "Gerrit collects thousands to hear him..." G. Smith urged the writer to spend two months in his county, and offered him liberal compensation for his services. A similar offer was made to Abby Kelley, who thought it an attempt to bribe her "and wrote Smith an excoriating letter." Charles T. [redacted] disclaimed having opposed women's rights. The writer [redacted] declared publicly that he would sooner vote for the devil than for such a man as Alvan Stuart, unless he retracted a published letter against "our conventions."

•New Hartford, N.Y. The writer must either desist from labor or cease to live. Reports that the conventions were mostly well attended. George Bradburn "felt quite grouty unless all creation turned out to hear him." Relates the incident at Syracuse. The three days' convention was large and interesting. A property meeting was held a day after the anti-slavery convention was adjourned. Abby Kelley was there. "She is intolerant beyond degree." Miss Kelley brought C.L.Remond and Frederick Douglass into a frenzied state against the writer's course. Describes their furious tirades after the writer had made a brief address. Remond "accused me of a breach of confidence, charged me with treachery and deceit... and publicly renounced all antislavery fellowship with me." Douglass sustained Remond in his charges, and declared that if the writer continued in the field, he, Douglass, would resign his agency.

The writer defended himself at the meeting, explaining the attitude of the Board, which had a "broad, liberal, and catholic spirit," and he "endeavored to apologize for Douglass and Remond." If their continuing their agencies depended on the writer's resignation, the society would be deprived of their services. "With scarcely an exception, their course was condemned." If the writer had been in good health, the little flare-up would not have occurred. Before reaching Syracuse, the writer had decided that duty to his health and to the cause "required cessation from labor." Explains that his eye had been fixed upon universal man," and that he considers slavery an effect of the social system. If the Board thinks it advisable, the writer will stand in his resignation at once.

If the Mass. Board, to whom alone he holds himself responsible, had written him such a letter, the writer would have "denounced the Board as a band of mean-spirited knaves." Explains that with one exception - a sharp rebuke to Alvan Stewart for his letter to the Liberty Press - the writer's course, in respect to the Liberty Party, has been the same throughout: he has nothing to say either for or against it, does not consider it his duty to damn the characters of its members, or to denounce the Party. As the addressee deems his course wrong and feels himself responsible, the writer suggests three ways by which she can relieve herself of the responsibility. Oakland, Clinton Co., Ohio. A large share of the labor of the conventions has fallen upon the writer, who has spoken in Ohio on an average of three hours each day. George Bradburn showed the writer a letter "in which you animadvert with some severity upon his course in relation to the 'Liberty Party.'" Thinks that the writer is mistaken in regard to Bradburn's course. The writer himself publicly exhorts all men to vote for noone unless he is a true abolitionist, his non-resistant views allowing him to go no further. Does not think that Charles (L.Remond) and Frederick (Douglass) "are excusable for deserting us so long, although we have got along very well without them." In New York and Ohio the writer has repeatedly been solicited to quit the conventions and labor for some state organization, but he considered the business of the Weymouth, Mass.: David Lee Child's piece "Where are we" (in the National Anti-Slavery Standard) has stirred up Abby Kelley. The writer does not think that she will "satisfy or enlighten Abby." A letter came from Child, "defending his course about Lewis' Tappan." The writer went to the Southwicks to see Abby Kelley and found her "looking well as to beauty tho delicate as to health." Abby Kelley was pleased with the Liberty Party meeting in Buffalo, where she spoke in behalf of the American A. S. Society. But the "New Orgs from the East, Henry B. Stanton & the rest, felt very bad about her speaking and hated her. [redacted] thinks that multitudes of good honest folks from Ohio [redacted] New York were present who really thought the American Society, a Non Resistant Society, and that she was enabled to undeceive them." Waterloo, N.Y. The writer has been ill, but contemplates starting her journey to New England tomorrow, to consult the Mass. Board. When first scanning David Lee Child's article, "Where we are," the writer was confirmed in her belief that D.L. Child was "totally unfit for the post he occupies." Points out passages in the article which the writer considers "a heavier calumny against us than even New Organization has been guilty of." Hundreds of subscribers whom the writer obtained for the Standard are "come outers." Expecting Child's dismissal, the writer was surprised to see a copy of his article in the last Liberator without a word of condemnation.

Northampton, Mass. Reports on the improvement of his wife and her mother who were injured in a carriage accident. The writer believes that John A. Collins's resignation was probably seasonable on account of his "deep and absorbing interest" in the "no property scheme" and the "insignificance in which he has held the anti-slavery enterprise" for some time past. "I despise and abhor the spirit that would persecute or proscribe him, on account of his peculiar notions respecting property..."; although the writer considers these notions fallacious, he fears nothing but the "cowardly or despotic suppression of thought and speech." Wants to know all the facts in the case of Collins's "personal affair" with C.L.Remond and F. Douglass. Remarks on the "wonderful transformation" of Nathaniel P. Rogers's mind. "His visit here was most refreshing to all hearts." The writer discusses David L. Child's

 The writer has written a censorious letter to Nathaniel P.
 Rogers because of "that abuse of O'Connell's Grace." Dislikes Yerrinton (James Brown Yerrinton)'s articles: "If Garrison does not take the stuff out of his hand, I shall drop my Liberator. I am ashamed of it. All Edmunds Quincy's good articles are neutralized." Collins and Maria Weston Chapman laid out the plan for 100 conventions in Massachusetts next winter. Collins heard that A. K. (Andrew Robeson?) had gone to Boston "to pull David Ch. [redacted] out of his Editorial Chair."
 Collins spoke as though "se [redacted] in his mind to resign the agency." (Oliver) Johnson has just returned from Vermont;

Dedham, Mass.. The writer is pretty well satisfied with his article on Garrison and (Daniel) O'Connell. In it he states that O'Connell eulogised Garrison in a public speech in 1840 and that he identified himself publicly with American Abolitionism. Asks if he is mistaken in either point. Playfully threatens that if Anne W. Weston does not treat him well, he will send her back to Weymouth and have little Emma Weston back again. "She is worth all the rest of you put together." Joshua Leavitt said that the writer's statements are "the reverse of the truth." Leavitt intends to make an explanatory statement (in the Lowell Cour.). •Oakland, Ohio. Frederick Douglass is lecturing "most ably and successfully" to large audiences. The writer repeats information received in a letter from a friend, Augustus Wattles, about the rupture that occurred at the annual meeting at Jonesboro, Indiana. Accordingly, Douglass interrupted George Bradburn, who claimed parliamentary right to continue his speech. Douglass appealed to the Chair, Daniel Worth, who decided in favor of Bradburn. Charles L. Remond called the chairman a jackass and appealed to the meeting, which sustained the Chair. Remond remarked: "they must be a set of monkeys out here in the West." James Monroe was called, but would not speak at that meeting. "Remond and Douglass choose to be the lions of the party and are unwilling to be directed by others..." The writer is pained to observe a want of harmony among the Eastern friends. Suggests that the plan of calling conventions with several antislavery speakers scheduled is a bad one. The antislavery reform is but partial reform. "The circumstances which continually surround our speakers are calculated to foster self-esteem..." Proposes that suitable new agents be appointed and those now engaged be gradually withdrawn. An Eastern friend to whom the writer suggested Abby Kelley as general agent "seemed to have something of a horror of the gynocracy which would be constituted by having Miss Kelley in the field and Mrs. Chapman in the council."

Oakland, Ohio. Frederick Douglass has given his own version of the incident which the writer reported in a previous letter from information received from Augustus Wattles. According to Douglass, George Bradburn, after offering a resolution, consumed the afternoon in answering a list of objections. The next morning the chairman, after reading the resolution, said that Bradburn was entitled to the floor. Douglass disputed this because Bradburn was not going to speak to the resolution. The chairman upheld Bradburn, whereupon Remond appealed to the meeting, which sustained the Chair. Bradburn conceived the idea that they were trying to hinder his speaking "and made some very offensive personal remarks, alluding to them as colored men, styled their conduct monkeyism - " and continued his speech for the whole day, "except a few minutes when Remond repelled his personalities," but neither called the Chair a jackass nor the people monkeys. The writer repeats his suggestion that a better arrangement might be made for anti-slavery speakers than the present conventions. The writer reports and comments on the situation of the churches. Disapproves of sectarianism. "Liberty Hall at Oakland is consecrated to Freedom."

Philadelphia. The writer is surprised that the Executive Committee in New York has not yet issued the call to the meeting in Philadelphia, for which a house has been procured. Thinks that the call should not come from Philadelphia, but from the committee of the National Society. Elizabeth Neall is mistaken in saying that there would "certainly be a mob." "Our minds however were made up from the first to hold the meeting mob or no mob." The writer does not agree with the addressee that "'mob violence' would do good." In Philadelphia they have been mob-ridden ever since the burning of Pennsylvania Hall, on which occasion "the mobocrats had a fair triumph." Asks how long the American A.S. Society is to continue under the present regime. Objects to control by the Hopper family. Writes about the price of copies of a mezzotint of Lucretia Mott.

There are hundreds of recent converts, not yet thoroughly indoctrinated, whom the writer holds in her hand. A one-day meeting was held at Canastota previous to the State Nominating Convention. Comments on the Wesleyans and their attitude toward the "infidel Garrisonians." About $130 were raised, "and the triumph over the New-organization was quite delightful." thinks Foster may "crush New Organization and save the true abolitionists of the party..." Recounts the appeals for co-operation made to the opponents: "But our tears were all in vain....Alvan Stewart declared it necessary to go to the ballot box in order to be an abolitionist and J.C. Jackson would not work in a society with nonresistants." The opposing party withdrew to a schoolhouse, where they had "as large a number as ourselves." Asks the addressee "never again to suspect me of being under the influence of such reptiles as Jackson and Co." The writer wants Foster to stay in the central part of the state. «Liverpool, England. The writer thanks Miss Carpenter for a letter and a parcel of contributions to the Anti-Slavery Fair. Says that the Fair breaks down prejudices against Abolition. Speaks about a letter he was asked to take with him. He doubts if he can do this owing to strict regulations against passengers on steamships carrying mail. Quotes the dying address of Rev. Henry Ware to the Unitarian Conference at Providence, R.I. as delivered by Rev. Cannett. Wishes to be remembered to Dr. and Miss Estlin.

Wants to know if anything can be done to produce a more efficient "national committee" (Executive Committee of the American Anti-Slavery Society?) Thinks an amicable solution should be possible. Objects to D. L. Child's Whig bias, which he thinks should not be so apparent in the National Anti-Slavery Standard. Disapproves of the Garrisonian opposition to the Liberty Party. Vol. 19

To Caroline Weston

«Boston: The writer is sick in bed with influenza; describes symptoms and will take the medicine prescribed by Hervey (Weston). Tells at length about the correspondence with Thomas G. Appleton, who received a letter intended for John James Appleton (see letter no. 78). Hopes that the goods sent from Paris by T. G. Appleton will arrive in time, and suggests from what sources they may be paid for. A box has arrived from Dublin, others seem to be on the way from Cork and Glasgow. The Liberty Bell is "almost done - tolerably successfully." Edmund Quincy has contributed a good story, but "«Nathaniel P.: Rogers's piece is not a credit to him - and will not go in. We may hear from Longfellow & Stetson." The writer also asked Charles Sumner. Alludes to David L. Child's "folly."

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

New Bedford, Mass.. The writer was relieved at receipt of the addressee's letter, except for the news of her illness; exhorts her to take care of herself and get as much work as possible out of others. The letter is concerned mainly with preparations for the Boston fair. The writer does not favor oil: "illumination should be made with candles." The writer expects Horvey Weston to give up his room to her for the time of the fair: "he can sleep somewhere else or be hung on a peg" Strongly favors greens to decorate the hall. Discusses details of the refreshment table. Tells addressee to "make all the Boston folks fetch their collesticks as well as lamps - Hail Holy Light - !!!"

To Whom?

e ? = The writer tells of a discussion between herself and George Ripley about J. A. Collins. The writer maintained that Collins had not left the Abolitionists. Ripley said he had by embarking on another enterprise. The writer replied that, although Collins cannot work with the Abolitionists as devotedly as before, he is nevertheless respected by friends of the cause, whom he helps whenever he can. Ripley thought that Collins had cheated the Abolitionists out of their money when he collected from persons from whom they expected money. The writer saw no motive for his doing that. Ripley called Collins a materialist and the writer agreed that he probably had that tendency. [redacted] ludes to Gerrit Smith's promise of $10,000 to the Colonization Society "under a mistake

The writer, surrounded by poverty and misery, has "ardently assisted" the advocates of a law against the employment of women in coal mines, "and the legislature was positively dunned with petitions signed by 'women of Birmingham' on the subject." The best friend in the struggle for various reforms is the press. The writer disagrees with the addressee's censorious view of Joseph Sturge; thinks "his heart to be the seat of every virtue," his only apparent fault being "that he is too conciliatory - too mildly good." «Darlington, England. The writer discusses the use of the first name in the salutation of a letter. Talks about her clothes and criticises the Quaker doctrines pertaining to dress. Thinks that a certain treatment that was planned for for H. G. Chapman's tuberculosis would have been th severe. Discusses hydrotherapy, shipments of goods to the Anti-Slavery fair and the controversy between J. C. Fuller and J. J. Gurney.

Tried to get some of Gurney's letters from Amelia Opie. Criticises Daniel O'Connell's treatment of Garrison.

[?] Doesn't think that the Bible should be a "book of oracular authority." Believes that a person has the right to form his own opinions. The Bible is not infallible. "It is men who write books, not God. ... We must be disinterested lovers of humanity. ... I want to do right & be right, for righteousness' sake, - that is all."
